THE TWO ROADS TO WEALTH.

(Concluded.)

So Mary was left to finish the sentence according to the dictates of her own feelings or imagination. But Frank took the more satisfactory method of finishing it on paper.

How the sentence really ended may be inferred from the fact that the next week Frank was bustling about with an extra gleam of satisfaction on his fine countenance, making preparations for building a house. A light heart makes light work. In an incredibly short time he had finished one of the prettiest little cottages you ever saw. It was painted white, with green blinds, and a portico all round. It stood far enough from the road to allow a large garden, which was enclosed by a white fence, with a gate fastened by a string. Behind the house at some distance, rolled the Connecticut river, with its beautiful expanse of interval land on either side, ornamented here and there with a solitary, graceful elm. Is there a river in the world whose path is marked with more beauty and verdure than the Connecticut? Among all the dwellers on its banks perhaps there never was a happier couple than the one who, on May day, took possession of the new cottage.

'And so,' says Miss Jemima Wilkins, that was, as she was returning with others from the wedding visit, 'poor Mary Green is Mrs. Francis May! I suppose she will carry her head pretty high now.'

'Frank's a fool,' thought Mr. Ashton, 'to marry a girl who hasn't a cent in the world!'

Years rolled on. Frank and Mary were happy in each other, and ever active in promoting the happiness of all about them. They had two children, Willy and Mary—the prettiest and most interesting children in the world—at least, in the eyes of their parents.

But when the sun of our prosperity shines brightest, the storm may be gathering. One night, as the May family were retiring to rest, there was a knock heard at the door. On opening it, they found a poor beggar, who asked the favor of a night's lodging in the barn. He was rather a suspicious looking character, but Mary said, 'Let him stay poor fellow!' and Mr. May consented. The family then retired to rest, little dreaming how much their hospitality would cost them.

About midnight there was a cry of 'Fire!' They started from their beds and rushed out of the house. What were their feelings when they discovered the barn in a blaze and the flames just communicating with the house.

'Run Mary, exclaimed Frank, 'take the children to the little grove, while I shall see what can be done.'

But he soon found there was nothing to be done, for he could get no water; the well was so near the burning buildings that he could not approach it. Poor Frank stood still, and with his arms folded across his breast, looked on in silent agony, while the trembling family ran all from the grove. The village was alarmed, and in a few moments almost every man was on the ground. But a fire is a thing of such rare occurrence in the country, that the people do not know what to do with it.

Though these worthy neighbors could do nothing but stand with Mr May and look on, yet could you have seen their faces, as the light flashed upon them from the blazing pile, you would have read in each the strongest expressions of sympathy.

When all was over—when the last rafter had fallen in and the last blaze had flickered out—Frank turned away with a sad heart and went to the grove, where Mary and the children were waiting.

Well Mary, said Frank, what are we to do?'

'Do" replied his wife, 'let us kneel down and return thanks that we are all safe.'

'Ah Mary, you are right. I was thinking only of what we have lost, you are thinking only of what we have saved. With such a treasure left to me, how can I repine, even for a moment?'

And there on the green grass, under the light of the moon, and the shade of the trees they kneeled down and poured out heartfelt praises for their merciful deliverance.

Some of their friends now approached, and perceiving how they were engaged, waited at a distance in respectful silence, till the little group arose, then they came up, and taking each by the hand, gave utterance to their feelings of sympathy and congratulation. The words were few, but they were such as go straight to the heart. One of these friends insisted on taking them all to his own house, where he said they should be welcome to stay till they could do better.

'I cannot imagine how this fire originated,' said Mr. May, as they entered the kind neighbor's house.

'O, I can tell you,' replied little Willy, 'it must have been the old man's pipe, for when he went out to the barn I saw him smoking. So I suppose he ran away when the fire first broke out, for fear you would lay it to him.'

'So much for taking vagabonds into your barn,' thought Mr. Ashton who was one of the company, but he did not feel just then like saying it.

Next day I believe every man, woman and child in the village turned out to see the ruins. As they stood looking at the smouldering heap, the murmur went round, that such a man should meet with such a calamity.

'He has always been helping us,' said one, and now its our turn to help him. Come, lets show that we hav'nt forgotten old scores.'

The suggestion took in a moment, and a subscription was opened on the spot. For want of paper and pencil, they took a piece of clean smooth board, and a bit of newly made charcoal. It was handed round, and in a few moments every name was down. Enough was subscribed in money, labor and materials to rebuild the house. To work they went forthwith. If the former house went up in a hurry this went up quicker. In a very short time a house and barn were completed, exactly like the first.

I shall never forget the day the Mays took possession. As the men of the village had built the house the women and children determined to furnish it. All day long presents were pouring in. Mrs Wilkins and Mrs Ashton and a few of the first ladies, furnished the heaviest articles for the parlour and chambers, while the farmers' wives filled up the kitchen, pantry and cellar. One brought a tub of nice butter another a couple of cheeses. One old lady a dozen pair of stockings, which she had sat up nights to knit since the fire.

Among the rest came Rosy Lynwon, Willys favorite playmate, a sweet little girl about six years old. She had something wrapped up in her apron. When she came in, Willy who had been capering about with childish joy all day, ran up to her and peeping into her apron, exclaimed, 'why Rosy, if there isn't your bantum chicken.'

'Yes, Willy, its for you—mother said I might give it to you.'

It was Rosy's pet, and the only thing in the world that she could call her own.

'There, Willy,' said she, as she opened her apron, and let it hop down on the floor, take good care of it, won't you, and don't let it get singed as yours did.' And then she ran away, for fear Willy should see a tear in her eye.

Meanwhile the farmers said the barn ought to be furnished too. So one drove up a fine load of hay, another came dragging along a squealing pig, 'because,' he said, 'Mr. May's pig got roasted before his time.'

Such a scene of joyful bustle as house yard and barn presented you never saw. I believe it was the happiest holiday the village of B—— had ever enjoyed. That night Mr May was richer than he was before the fire.

'Well Frank,' said Mr. Ashton, as he stood with his hands in his pockets, looking at the heaps of good things, 'you have indeed taken a very circuitous road to wealth, but I believe you will get there before me after all.'

And so it proved, for, from this time Frank continued to rise in wealth and influence, and at length became the richest man in the place. For a while Ashton went on as before, but at length he tired of his 'turnpike,' and concluded to make a flying leap. He and Esquire Wilkins engaged in a grand speculation, which turned out to be a grand humbug, and plunged them in irretrievable ruin. Had Ashton resembled Frank, his ruin might not have been irretrievable—but in the day of prosperity he had cared for no one, and now in his adversity no one cared for him.

A WERRY GRAVE HEXORTATION

I believe you isn't married, Ned?
You does'nt know the sweets
Vat waits upon that happy state,
Ven man and woman meets.
The busum's warm emotions, Ned,
The drops within the eyes.
The nice washd things, the darned stockings,
And all them tender ties.

You don't know vat it is, Ned,
Vile lying in your bed,
To gaze on careful woman's form,
Vile the breakfast things is spread.
Ven you don't vant to get up, Ned,
The kiver feels so nice,
And she says, 'take another cup,
And this here t'other slice.'

Vile the fire is burning bright, Ned,
And all upon the chair,
Your linen and your drawers, Ned,
is hanging up to air.
I axes every heart, Ned,
Vat isn't made of steel,
If they can gaze upon that fire,
And not a warming feel?

Oh! werry few indeed, Ned,
Knows ven theyre truly happy,
Ven the baby is fetched in, Ned,
To kiss its lazy pappy!
You little tancy, pency thing—
Its mammy—tum and eat her,
You blessed babe—it was so thweet
It couldn't be no thweeter.

You dod, a blessed angel you—
It pulls its puppy's hair!
Take fingers out of puppy's cup—
Don't cry then, thweetest—there.
Oh! fie! to spill all puppy's tea!
You naughty, ducky dandy,
Owny, ooby, voguey, poguey;
I thweet as sugar candy.

Oh Ned! there are some moments ven
The sternest hearts will quiver;
Just let that baby spill your tea,
Vile you're beneath the kiver.
Vun little hand within your hair;
The t'other in your cup,
Dont vonder if we sometimes feel
As ye could eat 'em up.

An Irishman slipped up and came down 'broadside' upon his back, which pulled his breath a minute or two, besides bruising his head considerably. Recovering, he jumped up, threw himself into a fighting attitude, shook his fist at the ice, as if he was about to take summary vengeance upon the slippery substance, and with violent gestures and threatening voice exclaimed—

'Faith and ye'll take a sweat for this before June, sure.'

THE HUNTRESS

WASHINGTON CITY D. C

SATURDAY OCTOBER 26:::::1850

ABOLITIONISTS, ALIAS CHURCH AND STATE.

Whose life would be save if these men ever gain the mastery. From the Pittsburg (Pa) Chronicle:

"Rather Savage.—The Abolitionists of Massachusetts are determined to skin Daniel Webster. Stephen Foster, one of their champions, addressed a meeting of the faithful there a few days ago, and startled them with the following announcement of his designs upon the Secretary's reputation:

'Anti-slavery can't prospes till we have killed Daniel Webster. Mr. Chairman, I shall be understood to speak figuratively here. I care nothing for his body, I hope providence will spare him to us as a subject for dissection. But I mean we must destroy, what is of far more consequence than bodily life, his reputation. He is a traitor and a villain. Compare him with Benedict Arnold, and he is far meaner and more despisable than he,' etc."

Were we to give an opinion upon this declaration, we should say that there was little difference between beasts in human shape, and the savage beasts of the forest. If there be any difference it is in favor of the latter, as they are void of reason. But the human brute, made in the image of God and indued with reason, why should they act the brute unless he be a drunkard or insane—if they are neither, what becomes of their reason and their religion which they pretend to, when they use such language and evince the venom of reptiles toward any fellowman, but toward a man of Mr. Webster's known patriotism, talents, probity and honor—a man who, regardless of party, friend or foe, stepped forward to the rescue of the Union more than once. The midnight assassin would gain by a comparison with such unheard of and wanton malignity, so daringly avowed in the article just quoted.

What can Mr. Webster say? what can the enlightened citizens of Boston say? What can New England say in excuse for such ruffianly language bestowed upon their favorite son, by their own citizens? Nothing.

They boast of their schools—they boast of their religion. Now it is admitted by all men and strongly urged, that learning and CHRISTIANITY [not money religion] are the great safeguards against crime, and if properly instilled into the minds of youth in tender age, implants virtue, principle, truth and honor, in short the love of God and man.

Again: "Education, the main pillar which sustains the Temple of Liberty." But no man can convey to another what he does not possess himself, this is self-evident. Will any one say this Foster is a christian? or is more improved in morals by education than a savage? Many a savage would eclipse him in benevolence and morality. Mr. 'Webster is a traitor and a villain.' 'He would kill his reputation and keep his body for dissection.' 'Far meaner than Benedict Arnold.' This is the gospel they spread—but they now call it 'Religious instruction,' and themselves a 'moral people.' What fiends! There wants words to convey the enormity of this low contemptible ruffian, to apply such language to a gentleman of the highest standing, both in this country and in Europe—the pride of the bar, and the stay of the Senate. See the honors that have been showered upon him since he came to manhood, for these honors they hate him—they hate everything that is good—a christian is all love, but their hearts are filled with malice, there is no room for love. Their thousand schools! alas! look at the result! The schools may be well arranged and well supported but it is in the teachers the fault lies.

The Unitarians we are aware, have good teachers, clear of sectarian bigotry, but there are so few of them, compared to the Church and State party whose name is legion, made up of the odds and ends of creation, under the strictest eye [as it appears] of the Presbyterians; whose chief pursuit is acquiring money and increasing their numbers, after the plan of Julius Cæsar; with money he got men, and with men he got money, and each for the same purpose, civil war. Cæsar put an end to the republic of Rome—these are aiming to put an end to our Republic. He conquered by the bravery of his veteran troops, these aim to conquer by treachery and corruption. Cæsar's sword cut off all the friends of the Republic and was joined by the rabble, so it is with our traitors and lest they might fail, they have all the absurdity common to cowards, by engaging the vilest incendiaries from England, Scotland, and perhaps from Ireland. But a handful of brave men would soon put their millions to flight. Gentlemen, better not try it, in putting down one 'sin' you might chance to commit two or three sins: whereby you might lose your 'precious souls.' To reform one sin slavery for instance, implies the ability to reform two or more sins. Therefore inasmuch as mobs, riots, murders, assaults to kill, counterfeiting, seduction, perjury and all manner of crime, and this too at their own doors, and often they are themselves the culprits, how can they stop the sin of slavery? One of their Theological student of Andover Mass. as it was stated in the newspapers a few years since, robbed the dead of a considerable amount of jewelry. A young gentleman—traveller, or perhaps a student—had died near that place, and having some valuable jewelry upon his person which were given him in exchange by a young lady to whom he was engaged to be married, desired upon his death bed that the jewels should be put in his coffin and buried with him. When the young student was to be minister of the gospel, opened the grave & coffin and stole them, and being recognized he was expelled; but what followed we never heard. Why is all this! want of a proper system of education. But some may ask how the system prompts to steal? we answer, by not instilling honesty into the minds of children. On the contrary they teach even infants to procure a cent. to bring a cent with them to Sunday school, under FALSE pretences viz. to put into God's treasury, and if they cannot get a cent they must bring a little redicule full of old rags to make paper for 'God's missionaries'—they had better have kept them to patch their own cloths, and their cents to buy shoes, poor things they had need of them, we have seen their naked toes in the snow.

But we were speaking of their vast number by which they have been able to do so much mischief in the country. The plan of Church and State or at least the first we knew of, was about the year 1816 or 17, about that time the Presbyterian ministers exclusively, were employed as teachers of the highest schools and academies, and did great good by bringing education to the people's doors. The students gained much knowledge, the teachers being liberal clever men. The students would form Thespian societies, and amuse themselves with plays. But all on a sudden the plays stopped, all kind of amusement, dancing particularly was forbidden to members of the Church, all these teachers having formed churches and had preaching places on alternate Sundays. This was as far back as the country was settled Westward, sufficiently to afford it—Sunday schools, missionaries, Bible, Indian, education societies sprung up as it were by magic, and all women that we saw—please to the life, that they were Mrs. President, and Mrs. Secretary somebody at last. Meantime cart loads of tracts came on for them to distribute, which and forming their societies, running about to collect money, attending night meetings, and three days and four days meetings, and Sunday schools caused them to neglect their domestic affairs, which they took care to make up out of the money they collected from the poor. But the greatest evil of the plan to the country and one from which it will take fifty years, if ever, to recover which was employing people throughout the country to gather up all the idle, profligate boys and young men from the ing ends of all places, though some were honest and all ignorent. These were scattered about in towns and cities, at a dollar per week board, paid by charity, all these, and some who refused the charity, education were Presbyterian ministers and overspread the land.

EXTRACT FROM Mr. CRITTENDEN'S LETTER.

"It is well known and admitted, historically and judicially, that this clause of the constitution was made for the purpose of securing to the citizens of slave holding States the complete ownership in their slaves, as property, in any and every State or Territory of the Union into which they might escape. Prigg vs. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 16 Peters, 539 It devolved on the General Government, as a solemn duty, to make that security effectual. Their power was not only clear and full, but according to the opinion of the court in the above cited case, it was exclusive, the States severally, being under no obligation, and having no power to make laws or regulations in respect to the delivery of fugitives. Thus the whole power, and with it the whole duty of carrying into effect this important provision of the constitution was with Congress, and accordingly, soon after the adoption of the constitution, the act of the 12th February, 1793, was passed, and that proving unsatisfactory and efficient, by reason, among other causes, of some minor errors in its details, Congress are now attempting by this bill to discharge a constitutional obligation, by securing more effectually the delivery of fugitive slaves to their owners. The sixth and most material subject in substance declares that the claimant of the fugitive slave may arrest and carry him before any one of the officers named and described in the bill, and provides that these officers and each of them shall have judicial power and jurisdiction to hear, examine, and decide the case in a summary manner; that if upon such hearing the claimant, by the requisite proof, shall establish his claim to the satisfaction of tribunal thus constituted, the said tribunal shall give him a certificate, stating therein the substantial facts of the case, and authorizing him with such reasonable force as may be necessary.

THE VACANT CHAIR.

By Miss Augusta Browne.

Our tears are falling fast for thee,
Thou in thy lowly grave sleeping,
Thou who art early laid to rest,
And canst not know our weeping.

Where art thou? ah, that vacant chair,
A mournful tale is telling,
A tale of woe that in our hearts
Shall evermore be knelling.

We miss thee in our daily paths,
Amid the household greeting,
When tones of tender love are breathed,
When friend with friend is meeting;

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST
UNRIVALLED INDUCEMENTS FOR 1850

A MAMMOTH PAPER,
DEVOTED TO MORALITY, PURE LITERATURE, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS, AGRICULTURE, SCIENCE, ART AND AMUSEMENT.

This paper contains from one-fourth to one-half more than the generality of 1?6 Dollar city weeklies.

The Proprietors of the SATURDAY EVENING POST return their sincere thanks to their friends and the public for the patronage extended to them since the enlargement of their paper, and respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. The belief expressed in their last Prospectus, that the POST is destined to take its stand at the very head of the weekly press, is fast becoming realized. The reason of this is in a great degree, to be found in the stand the POST has always taken against the immoral literature of the day. The public have felt, in the language of the North American and United States Gazette, of this city, that "The Post has done much towards correcting the taste of the newspaper reading public."

The proprietors of the Saturday Evening Post, in coming before the public with a new Prospectus, would respectfully solicit attention to what they have done in the past, as a guarantee for their promises of the future. They may safely say that no other paper in America has given to its readers so large and well chosen an amount of all kinds of reading, elegant and useful imaginative and practical, during the last year, as the Post. To say nothing of other tales and sketches, what paper has laid before its subscribers, during the past year four such novelets as Henery Benson,' 'The child Stealer,' 'Isabel Denison,' and The Deserted Wife!'

And the proprietors of the Post are determined that if possible the coming year shall be even a more brilliant one than the past. To begin with they have already secured the following original contributions, which will be published, and other choice pictures of life during the coming year:

The Baymounts: A Novelet by Miss Leslie; author of "Mrs, Washington Potts, &c. &c.

The Bride Of An Evening, A Tale Of Western Life A Novelet, by Mrs Southworth, author of "retribution,' 'The Deserted Wife,' &c

The Old Astrologer or, The Prophecy Fulfilled, A Novelet by T S Arthur, author of 'agnes or the Possessed,' the Child stealer, &c,

The Belle and the Blue, A Novelet by Caroline Lee Hentz, author of "The Mob Cap,' 'Aunt Patty's scrup Bag

TERMS.

THE GLOBE,
Congressional, Agricultural, and Literary Newspaper.

The Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur, and a Congressional Globe periodically as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source what ever may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in science, art, or agriculture. For material the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects will be consulted and it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and appendix, will besent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

PROSPECTUS

"THE SOUTHERN PRESS,"

for the conduct of which suitable Editors have been engaged who will also receive the aid of a number of eminent and able contributors.

There will be a daily, a tri weekly, and a weekly issue—the latter to contain substantially the same matter as the former, and intended to reach those points of the country whose mail facilities are limited.

The paper will not be exclusively political—but will embrace on its broad sheet the General News of the day, Domestic and Foreign, by mail and telegraph, Commercial and Agricultural Intelligence, Literary criticisms, Original Essays, Literary and Miscellaneous, and in short all those items of general interest, the collected aggregate of which constitutes the interesting and valuable newspaper. Great care will be taken to give full and correct reports of the proceedings and Debates in both Houses of Congress, as well as the action of the local Legislatures on the Southern question.

A limited number only of advertisements will be received—the main object being to furnish a large amount of reading matter.

The paper will be printed on a sheet equal in size to those of the other Washington papers, and the material will be procured especially for the purpose.

It is confidently hoped that every true true friend to the South will aid in procuring subscribers, and forward the names with the amount subscribed to some southern Representative at Washington forthwith.

Postmasters are authorized by law to remit subscriptions free of postage.

TERMS.

For Daily—the price will be per annum, . . . $10.00
For Triweekly during the session of Congress, and Semiweekly during the recess, . . 5 00
